The Matildas, our women soccer stars, have waltzed into the Olympics. Now Amy Taylor is ready to show the world what she can do.

Matildas defender Amy Taylor is playing a waiting game. Waiting to learn if she'll merely be a stand-by player for the women's national soccer team at the Sydney Olympics, or part of the show. At 21, there's plenty of time for her to blow them away if it doesn't happen. Off the field, she's already started. Amy, you'll recall, was the covergirl for the Matildas' bold nude calendar. The interest hasn't stopped since. You're about to see why.

Knickers from Wheels and Dolls Baby, diamante bracelet from Peter Lang, shoes from Dhato.

Bikini from Cibella, snake chain bracelets from Peter Lang. Opposite: Lisa Ho, bikini, bracelet from Peter Lang.

Amy started playing the round-ball game when she was 12 at primary school. It was her first choice of many sporting loves. "I was never a real tomboy, but I was always out there doing something. I'd get out at lunch-time and play touch footy with the boys. I had a go at everything when I was young – athletics, soft-ball, basketball, cross-country. I've always been active."

She made the Australian team when she was 17, and has 17 caps to her name. But when the national team was announced, Amy found herself one of four players on the outer. Frustrating? You bet, but she's prepared to wait. "I'm only a baby, so it's not the end of the world. Initially I cried my eyes out for a few days, but there'll be other chances. It's just unfortunate I could miss out on the big one."

Bikini from Cibella, neck piece from Peter Lang. Opposite: Adidas sports bra from Rebel Sport, briefs from Girl Star.

Footy players have been doing it for years, but there was an uproar when the Matildas got it all off for their provocative calendar, done so to stimulate interest in women's soccer. It worked, with 25,000 more copies sold than expected. By no coincidence, Amy was on the front. "Sex sells, as long as you've got the goods," she says. "We train a lot so we're lucky. Women's sport doesn't get a lot of coverage so we needed to do something to turn heads." Mission accomplished.

Bikini by Cibella, ROC sunglasses. Opposite: Lisa Ho bikini.

A Canberra girl all her life, Amy doesn't allow soccer to control her even if it consumes most of her time. Taking it easy is just as important. "I'm not addicted to soccer. I like to go out for dinner, hang-out with my friends, go roller-blading. Basically, I like to have fun. I'm game enough to have a go at anything." So we've seen.
